About Poultry & Livestock & Related Industries

Poultry and livestock are integral components of the agricultural industry, providing essential resources such as meat, eggs, milk, and other by-products. These animals play a crucial role in meeting the dietary needs of human populations and contribute significantly to global food security. Poultry, including chickens, turkeys, and ducks, are valued for their high-quality protein and versatility in culinary applications. Livestock, such as cattle, pigs, sheep, and goats, are prized for their meat, milk, and wool production. Additionally, these animals are important for soil fertility, pest control, and sustainable agricultural practices. The management and breeding of poultry and livestock require specialized knowledge and skills, making them a focal point of agricultural education and research. Overall, poultry and livestock are vital components of the agricultural sector, supporting food production, economic development, and rural livelihoods.
